Do you currently utilize the Assessment Management Platform (AMP) at your district?
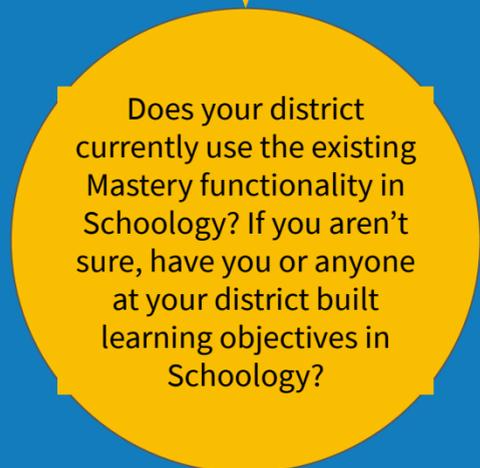

YES → Our first release of District Mastery, which the Standards-Based Gradebook is part of, will not be compatible with AMP assessments. As such, we highly recommend that your district wait to rollout District Mastery until this capability is available. Please reach out to your Schoology representative should you have any questions.

Does your district currently use the existing Mastery functionality in Schoology? If you aren't sure, have you or anyone at your district built learning objectives in Schoology?
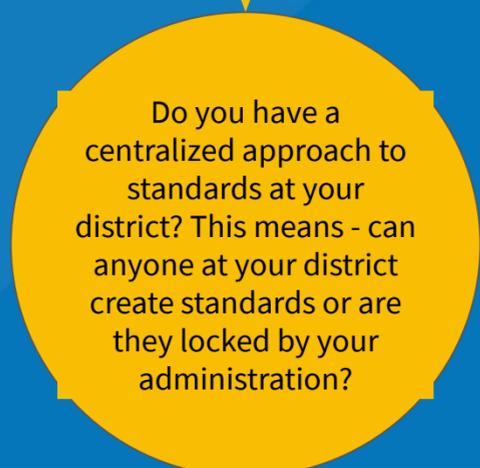

YES → We do not currently have a way to transfer existing learning objectives or standards into the new District Mastery solution. The Schoology team is currently working on a migration plan to help assist districts who have been using the legacy Mastery functionality.

If your district has a centralized approach to standards, you can turn on the new District Mastery system while still referencing old mastery in archived courses.

If you don't have a centralized approach to standards, our recommendation would be to wait to rollout District Mastery. Alternatively, you could begin testing the functionality within a "dummy" building in your Schoology instance. See here for instructions on the testing process. Please reach out to your Schoology representative should you have any questions.

Do you have a centralized approach to standards at your district? This means - can anyone at your district create standards or are they locked by your administration?

YES → Great! District Mastery will be a great tool to help further the standards based work happening at your district. As always, we recommend piloting new functionality with a specific building at your district. If you aren't sure how to create buildings for testing new functionality, you can follow these guidelines. Once you are ready, contact the Schoology Support team to have District Mastery turned on for you.

NO → Future releases of District Mastery will help support de-centralized approaches, however, our first release of the District Mastery tool is designed to support centralized standard based approaches. We understand that moving to a centralized standards based approach is a large undertaking. Our team is here to help! Please reach out to your Schoology representative to learn more about moving to a centralized standard approach.
